Master’s Programme

THE MASTER IN JOURNALISM AND COMMUNICATION, CONCENTRATION IN MEDIA AND DIGITAL COMMUNICATION is offered in partnership with the University of Neuchâtel (UNINE). The UNINE programme prepares students for a career in journalism, while the University of Geneva programme emphasises communications and digital crafts and is considered a specialisation media and digital communications. The core curriculum (18 credits) taught by both universities provides fundamental theoretical grounding in sociology, communication, journalism and the media. The specialisation conferred in Geneva provides training in communications (in particular, the in-depth study of organisational communication, scientific communication, political communication, etc.), information in the context of the internet and the media (strategic information, communication strategy, web and social media projects, information processing, digital marketing, online reputation management), methodological tools, and survey methods. This Master’s programme is designed to respond to the needs of companies and organisations who recruit graduates interested in working in the information and communication sectors in an era of rapidly developing current and new media.
